

A "not-for-profit" hospital in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, has a residency program in Family Medicine and is set to commence similar programs in clinical and diagnostic specialties beginning with General Surgery and Internal Medicine in 2016. The hospital is also undergoing major expansion to position it as an advanced tertiary and academic medical centre. This institution has a rich established history of sustained contribution to the development of healthcare in Tanzania to support both the private and public sector. AHP is recruiting qualified clinicians with relevant academic medicine experience to fill these posts. There is a real sense of purpose in working at this institution – a purpose to healthcare, patient care, training and nurturing specialists to make a sustainable contribution to healthcare in Tanzania.
